Romans

Society was made up of the very rich but also of very poor slaves. This resulted in conflict and therefore crime. By the time the Romans got to Britain, they had already developed a very detailed legal process. The Romans had laws to cover every possible crime, from assassinating the Emperor to polluting the streets. Roman laws were called 'The Twelve Tables'. The worst crimes could be punished by crucifixion, or being sent to fight in arenas.

Anglo-Saxons

Most crimes demanded that the criminal pay the injured party compensation, known as wergild. 'Gild' meant gold. A criminal could be outlawed for a crime. This meant that they were outside the law and anyone could harm or kill them.

If there were no witnesses to a crime the accused could have a trial by ordeal this could include being submerged in water if you drowned you were guilty, but if you survived you were innocent.

Tudors

Increasing populations, dissolution of the monasteries and gaps between rich and poor meant crime was very common. Public executions were huge events These included beheadings, hangings, burning, pressings and boiling alive! Begging without a licence would mean you would be whipped out of the town and theft resulted in having a limb chopped off. The idea was that severe punishments would put others off from committing crimes.
